Jeremiah 25:1-11

Some parts of scripture are humbling. Our response should be to pause, reflect, and seek God's forgiveness. Jeremiah 25 is one of those scriptures. The context is ancient Israel during the evil reign of Manasseh, but the truth is relevant to our daily lives. If, of course, we are willing to see it.

Perhaps it would be wise to take some time to pray over your rhythms and patterns of worship. Are you listening? Is your heart open? Is there any part of your life which is arousing God's anger, displeasure, or disgust?

Make no mistake: God has standards. Grace abounds to all who would humbly seek Him. Sometimes it might be easy to think that who we are and how we live (the choices we make) does not really matter in the big picture. However, our choices really and truly do matter.

Take some time to listen to God and repent of things that have drawn you away from God's heart. Then, ask Him to grant you the faith, grace, and courage to follow where He leads.
