

A Life Poured Out

1 Corinthians 15:12-28

The tombstone of missionary William Bromley reads, “A warrior of the cross who poured out his life for God and the people of Jimi Valley.” The Jimi tribesmen were primitive, war-like people, deeply involved in idol worship.

The Jimi people seemed to be without hope. Sickness, tribal wars, and death were a normal part of their lives. Believing that Christ died for their sins and rose again was a concept difficult to accept. They did not understand such a love. Bromley poured out his life for seven years before he saw his first convert, yet he died seeing multitudes won for Christ.

Believing in the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ is a necessary component of understanding saving faith. Bromley believed and lived the promise that a life fully surrendered to God is made possible because of Christ’s victory over death and sin.
