

Honey & Future Hope

Description

Proverbs 24:13-22

Donna spent a delightful three months teaching biology at Africa Nazarene University under the direction of the distinguished Dr. Isaac Kigatiira. He is an apiologist (a specialist in the study of bees), and is past director of the International Bee Research Association. On one occasion, they traveled to a large enterprise where all manner of bee colonies and bee products were on display. There were soaps and skin care products made from beeswax, also food stuffs made from pollen and royal queen bee jelly. While there Donna pondered the importance of golden, sweet honey to bees.

Honey represents the future to these small, highly efficient insects. When they have amassed a cache of the sweet stuff, their colony can be confident of their survival to the next season.

Like honey amassed for the future of the colony, so is wisdom to the sojourner. It assures them of a future hope. Gather this wisdom from God's word, from Jesus' example, keep it tucked in the hurting places of your life and know His hopeful future.
