Psalm 148:1-14

A few years back when the New York Yankees won the World Series, New York City united together in a chorus of praise. The bakeries sold blue and grey cupcakes, the Empire State Building lit the night sky with bright blue, and Times Square billboards flashed, "We are the Champs." Everywhere you went spirits were high; praise seemed to be rising from every corner of the city.

In a grander way, Psalm 148 urges all creation to praise God. From every corner and crevasse of creation: sea creatures, weather, landscapes, animals large and small, men and women, both young and old, and all the angels are all called to offer praise to God. Together all of creation forms the most magnificent choir—all giving praise to the Almighty.

Today you may find yourself alone in your prayer closet, perhaps praying alongside family, or with a few good friends. Regardless of how small your numbers may be, choose to join this chorus with your voice of praise today.
