John 3:27-36

We are surrounded by people and projects that will teach us how to optimize our output, how to understand our gifts, how to market our skills. We can optimize our efficiency. These are not bad things to know. They are practical pieces of information that can help us effectively execute tasks at work and home.

Beyond our productivity is the conversation about God's call on each of our lives. Regardless of profession or season of life, we all are invited into the flow of the grace of God in our world. God has equipped each of us with what we need to serve and to love. We all are called to be agents of the kingdom of God.

We speak not only with words, but also with actions. Take a minute to look around at the everyday rhythm of your life. This passage in John reminds us that God gives the Spirit without limit. How has God prepared you to preach the good news with the activity of your life? Take a moment today to allow God to search your heart and guide your steps.
